

Major food companies substitute bisphenol A

18-Nov-2010

Many major packaged food companies, including Heinz, and US retailers, have taken action to substitute the endocrine disrupting chemical bisphenol A (BPA) during the last year, according to a report by the investment firm Green Century. Seeking Safer Packaging 2010 is an update of a report first published in 2009, and ranks food and beverage companies on their efforts to address BPA in their product packaging.

- Report on ChemSec website